House of Delegates.

The session of the House yesterday was in some respects the most interesting sitting of that body for several years. Though the expected debate on the merits, or the reverse, of prohibition did not take place, the consideration of the joint resolution on that subject developed several side issues of a nature to arouse the combativeness of the partisans and opponents of the project to submit the prohibition amendment to a vote of the people, and also gave rise to a question of absorbing interest and paramount importance to the House as a legislative body.

THE BATTLE REGISS.

The hour of cleven o'clock having arrived the Speaker announced the special order of the day, the consideration of House joint resolution No. 8, proposing a prohibitory anneadment to the Constitution.

The Clerk read the resolution requiring forty-four votes to pass it. As a few members are absent who would vote for the measure, I think it would be hardly fair to press the thing to a vote to-day, and as I cannot tell just now to what day it ought to be postponed, I move for the present in luy ir on the lable."

This motion prevailed, and the hush of expectancy which had prevailed from the floor of the House looked in each other's facts, was broken by a sigh of disappointment, and the numerous visitors on the floor of the House looked in each other's facts, was broken by a sigh of disappointment, and the numerous visitors on the floor of the House looked in each other's faces with an expression approaching disgust, as they realized that for the second the disputation of the subject of most interest, and one by one the visitors began to the clerk read a bill of no general interest, and one by one the visitors began to the clerk read a bill of no general interest, and one by one the visitors began to the clerk read a bill of no general interest, and one by one the visitors began to the clerk read a bill of no general interest, and one by one the visitors began to the clerk read a bill of no general interest, and one by one the visitors began to the clerk read a bill of no general interest, and one by one the visitors began to the clerk read a bill of no general interest, and one by one the visitors began to the clerk read a bill of no general interest, and one by one the visitors began to the clerk read a bill of no general intere The Cierk reau a oil of no general interest, and one by one the visitors began to depart. After consultation with some of the friends of the amendment, however, Judgo Ferguson decided that perhaps this was as good a time as any to press the matter to a vote, and he therefore again called it up.

The resolution was again real, and The resolution was again real, and Speaker Wilson said:
"Gentlemen: The question is, shall the resolution be adopted? Are you ready for the question?"

A momentary pause was unbroken by any offer to speak upon the question, and the Speaker therefore continued:
"Those who are of the opinion that the bill should pass will when their names are called answer aye; those opposed, no. The clerk will call the roll."
Perfect silence reigned as the clerk com-

"Brady," called the Clerk.

"No!" said that gentleman, decidedly.

"Cox." "Aye."

"Cresap."

There was no response, the portly gentleman from Randolph having retired a few minutes before the vote was ordered.

"Crumrine." "No." This was rather a surprise to the House, as Dr. Crumrine had stated to an IFTELLIGENCER reporter who interviewed him some days ago that he expected to vote in the affirmative out of respect to the request of a large number of his constituents. of his constituents.

So the roll call proceeded, When Mr.

should pair with one of those who would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. Riley said that if there were forty-four members who intended to vote in the affirmative, and all the other members desired the defeat of the resolution, they could afford to refrain from voting in a body if but a single one of the others would do likewise.

Judge Morrow and Mr. Hubbard took decided stands in favor of excusing Mr.

Mr. Hubbard objected that this motion was not in order at this time, but that if the gentleman [Mr. Hall] were in contempt, the proper course would be to allow the roll to be finished and then act upon biscase. In the midst of the slight confusion arising Mr. Hall said that he proposed to keep faith with Mr. Thompson, and if the House felt disposed to force him into voting, he would vote, but he would vote no.

This announcement produced quite a round of applause, and some slight hisses, which were not readily supplessed, though the Speaker wielded his gavel vigorously. The call then proceeded.

Mr. Kepner, when his name was called, announced that he was paired with Mr. Cressp; that when he had entered into the arrangement he supposed that gentleman was absent on leave. He still felt disposed to observe the agreement, but if the House insisted upon his voltage he would vote aye. His vote was so recorded.

Mr. Lowry, when the Clerk called his name, said that he was paired with Mr. Wells, of Marion county, who would vote aye. His vote was so recorded.

The same objections were made to ex-

Judge Ferguson then made the same motion that he had made in Mr. Hall's case, that Mr. Lowry be taken into custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms. He said he had no personal feeling against Mr. Lowry, but he thought this was as good a time as any for the House to decide upon its

Mr. Holt opposed Mr. Ferguson's motion as an extreme measure, and Mr. Moffett took the same ground. Mr. Fulkerson favored it. He said he had no personal feeling, but on the contrary his feelings toward Mr. Lowry were of the most friendly character. But this was not a personal matter. It was a matter affecting the dignity and authority of the House, and these must be vindicated at any cost.
